This September, text4baby partner Juvenile Products Manufacturers Association (JPMA) is dedicating Baby Safety Month to safe sleep. In a recent interview with HMHB, Mike Dwyer, Executive Director of JPMA, discussed their new safe sleep campaign launched in June to educate parents about creating an optimal sleep environment for their baby. The campaign includes a five-city education and sleep product donation tour this fall. In each city, JPMA is working with Kids In Distressed Situations to facilitate donations of cribs and other safe sleep environments to children most in need. Learn more about the campaign at cribsafety.org.

Partner Spotlight

WhyHunger, who manages the National Hunger Clearinghouse, promoted text4baby in their latest national newsletter, the Clearinghouse Connection, sent to 1,400 Emergency Food Providers. The National Hunger Clearinghouse also operates the National Hunger Hotline, 1-866-3 HUNGRY, which connects people to emergency food resources in their community. The hotline is included in the text4baby service, and the Clearinghouse reports that between 2 and 3% of callers this past quarter have called the hotline number through text4baby!

Reality Check: Messaging's vast contributions to society today and tomorrow

Tony Holcombe, President and CEO of Syniverse Technologies (a text4baby implementation partner), wrote last week’s "Reality Check" article for RCR Wireless News. Holcombe writes about the "explosive growth of mobile messaging" and how it is not only a value to the end-user but also for the "members of this industry [who] are making positive contributions to society for today and tomorrow." The article covers mobile messaging services like text4baby and Amber Alerts in the United States, one for rural farmworkers in India, and a service dedicated to supporting HIV-positive citizens and their families in South Africa. For more information on these services, Syniverse Technologies and the full article, click here.
